

FogScreen™ projection screen raises a few hairs at Linnanmäki amusement park
Ghost Train renewed with ultramodern screen

Helsinki, May 3, 2007 - The summer season at Linnanmäki amusement park, located in Helsinki, Finland, opened to foggy conditions this year, due to its latest attraction the FogScreen projection screen, which can be seen as part of the Ghost Train ride. The high tech fog screen subtly renews this classic ride at Linnanmäki, which was originally opened in August 1950.

FogScreen creates stunning, attention-demanding presentations and effects where an image projected onto a fog surface that floats in the air. The fog is dry, so it can be touched and people can also walk through it.

"Linnanmäki wants to be a pioneer in everything, and just to give an example, the first hamburgers in Finland were sold at Linnanmäki," says Risto Räikkönen, Linnanmäki's CEO. "Every year Linnanmäki introduces four to five new rides, but particularly the old rides are subtly renewed. We had been looking for something new for the Ghost Train for a long time, but when we saw the FogScreen product for the first time, we knew right away that this was the renewal we had been looking for, this is something huge," he says, justifying his choice.

"Even if our company is conquering the world and FogScreen projection screen can be found in places such as Paris, Las Vegas, New York and Milan, it feels great to be able to experience FogScreen in our home town, Helsinki," says Mika Koivula, CEO of FogScreen, Inc. "Linnanmäki's Ghost Train is an excellent example of how FogScreen projection screen is suited to a wide variety of places and how it allows for the creation of a range of different experiences. Amusement parks are an important customer segment for us, and an example of this was found right here in Finland," he continues.
